

With all the testing so far that has been done, not only in this country but abroad, I cannot imagine an organization that controls our frequencies that would allow it's destruction or deterioration just to allow people another choice of internet access. I used to really respect the FCC in it's decision making and standards. After seeing several of the movers and shakers within the FCC, endorse BPL and want it's implementation, I now question the FCC's decision making abilities. This BPL makes no sense to degrade this countries HF spectrum on such out dated and sub standard facilities the power companies have strung up. It is really a shame that now only money governs the FCC's decision making. Ashamed, Steve Narducci W9SN